Proud to Share in Good Work of Salvation Army

The Salvation Army is noted for its remarkable work in locating missing persons—a work that is carried on all over the world. Recently, The Advance had the fortune to be able to share in this kindly work, and is proud of the fact, and still more proud that it is not the first time, nor even the tenth time. Relatives in England were anxious about a gentleman who had not been heard from for considerable time and whose last known address was Timmins. They enlisted the aid of the Salvation Army and the Men's Social Secretary of that organization asked the help of Major Cornthwaite of the local Army. Major Cornthwaite had little information to make a search, so he came to The Advance. The name of the missing man and the particulars available were published, and The Advance was hardly more than an hour before the telephone began to ring, giving Major Cornthwaite particulars of where the gentleman could be found. Among those thus answering the appeal in The Advance was the gentleman himself. He had been just about as worried as his relatives overseas, feeling that they must have been wiped out in some of the Nazi air raids, as he had received no letters from home for a considerable time. The explanation of the matter was that his letters home had gone astray, and his letters to him here had been returned as uncalled for though he was still getting mail at Timmins though working at a mine out of town. The gentleman cabled home at once to relieve any anxiety, and the Salvation Army had the satisfaction of bringing joy to people on both sides of the ocean.

Last week Major Cornthwaite received a letter from Lt. Col. James Merritt, Men's Secretary, Territorial Headquarters S.A., Toronto, reading in part, as follows:
 "We wish to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 27th ultimo regarding the above named. It is noted that through the very fine publicity which you were able to arrange, that the above has been located. This is very satisfactory indeed, and we wish you thanks for his kindly co-operation. We are sending word to England immediately. Thank you once again for kindly service rendered."

Lone Oasis in Iceland Where Liquor is for Sale

In Iceland (pronounced Esland), an island of 120,000 people, some of them saltwater fishermen with great thirsts, there is one and only one spot where liquor may be sold legally, and that is the Hotel Borg, leading caravansary in the proud capital city of Reykjavik, population 40,000 and at meal times only. So writes Joseph Driscoll in the New York Herald Tribune. He goes on:

"The Borg is something of a club for British and American officers, since it has been declared out of bounds for enlisted men and is too expensive for them, anyway, as it is for the vast majority of Icelanders.

"Throughout Iceland, at hotels and cafes and rural inns, one can purchase a domestic brand of beer (bjor, in the Icelandic tongue) for one krona (15 cents) a pint bottle. It's not worth it, except as mouthwash. The bjor is what prohibition Americans knew as near-beer, containing not more than one-half of one per cent. of alcohol.

"Black Death, also known as Hell's Breath, is more powerful but no tastier. This is a cheap bootleg concoction, compounded in the light of the moon from industrial alcohol. According to the chaplain aboard one of the warships on which I travelled, Black death has ruined thousands of British stomachs and has become a major military problem, so much so that American authorities are considering including genuine bourbon and rye in the supplies being sent to Iceland to the end that American stomachs may be kept in fighting trim. The chaplain, a teetotaler himself, approved of this.

"There is a British-American canteen in Reykjavik where, between certain stated hours like a British pub, one may purchase a flagon of Scottish pale ale (Jeffrey's is the brand, from Edinburgh) for two kroner. There is a limit of two bottles to a customer for it is heady stuff, containing four to six per cent. alcohol. The canteen is for enlisted men only.

"Scotch is dispensed (at the Borg) at the rate of $9 a bottle, but no individual can have a whole bottle. Four "doubles"—eight ounces—is the maximum allotted to a person under Icelandic statute on the theory that is sufficient to render you happy but harmless."

Police Court
 Luigi Giancarlo was fined ten dollars and costs and his permit cancelled for ten days here in police court on Tuesday on a charge of driving carelessly. Accused collided with a car driven by Tony Cecconi on the hill in Schumacher and testified that, although he was on the wrong side of the road, the accident was caused by the blinding lights of complainant's car. Mr. Cecconi testified that the on-coming car was on the left side of the road and that he had drawn to the extreme right and stopped in order to avoid the accident. He said that his lights were on dim and that he was going at 20 miles per hour. Crown Attorney, Mr. Caldwell, drew the attention of the court to the fact that the lights of a car coming down a hill seem very bright even though they are on dim. Miss Worship remarked that driving up a hill on the left side of the road was decidedly careless.

J. Brown, R. Turmi, W. Hener, E. Johnson, A. Galovich and C. Butler were each fined ten dollars and costs on charges of speeding.
