

'Jehovah's Witness' Given Heavy Fine or Jail Term in Police Court This Week

Magistrate Says There Isn't Any Doubt That the Man is a Member of the Outlawed Organization. Woman Fined Fifty Dollars for Possessing Obscene Literature.

Hector Samaur, 74 Windsor avenue, faced a charge of being a member of the outlawed "Jehovah's Witnesses" sect on Tuesday afternoon and in the middle of the man's defence the magistrate decided to make a conviction. At the conclusion when the accused started to stammer as he presented his defence in his own words, the magistrate fined him a hundred dollars and costs or the alternative of three months in jail. The evidence was short and to the point while the accused had his questions for cross-examination of the witnesses written on a piece of paper and more instructions on another piece of paper.

Constable Bert Braney of the Ontario Provincial Police testified that he had conducted a raid at the accused's home and had located nothing during his search. The accused had entered as the search was about half finished and was indignant about the whole thing but the constable said that he had finally convinced her that he had a search warrant for the house. He then asked to see her purse and the woman refused to give it to him. He had to take it away from her and when he looked inside he found her registration card and a small booklet of obscene literature. The booklet was entered as evidence.

The accused then said that she had found the booklet on the street and had put it in her purse intending to destroy it later. The magistrate then fined her and told her that she should be ashamed of herself for carrying such stuff around with her.

Daniel O'Shea was fined ten dollars and costs on a charge of common assault when the complainant took the stand to testify that he accused had attacked him several times and apparently for no reason. The accused did not appear in court.

Baptiste Bigras faced a charge of assault on a female but the complainant in the case asked the magistrate to withdraw the charge. She said that she now realized that her injuries had been sustained by an accident. Her injuries consisted of a broken leg. It was pointed out by the defence that the defendant and complainant as well as the several other persons had been on a party and were all "feeling good." They were sitting on a bench and the complainant had fallen off and broke her leg in the fall.

Alfred Polonick was dismissed on a charge of assault causing actual bodily harm when the magistrate was unable to decide which of the two men had started the fight. There wasn't any doubt as to whom was the victor but it was a question as to who had started it as the complainant appeared in court with almost half his face hidden by bandages, while the defendant showed very little effect of the battle.

The complainant, Matt Balnietski, told of going into a Fourth avenue pool room and of tossing a coin for fifty cents with a man inside. As he tossed his coin in the air the lights went out and the money that was at stake disappeared. The complainant said that was what started the fight as the accused had started to punch him for accusing him of taking the money. The pair then went outside and continued the fight on the sidewalk and the final result was that Balnietski received a broken nose, a black eye, a laceration on the top of his head and a couple of cracked ribs. Balnietski said that the accused, Alfred Polonick, had struck him several times as he laid on the sidewalk.

Polonick took the stand and denied that he had struck the man as he laid on the sidewalk and contended that Balnietski had started the fight and had struck him on both sides of the face and had torn his shirt. When they went outside both wanted to fight and Balnietski had received his injuries when he was knocked down, the accused said. Magistrate Atkinson was unable to figure out who had started the fight so he dismissed the charge.

Charles Baker paid five dollars and costs on a charge of disorderly conduct while Robert McGrath paid ten dollars and costs on the same charge. Police said that the pair were fighting when they were arrested. Henri Chartier tried to stop the police from taking the two battlers to the police station and as a result he was assessed twenty-five dollars and costs. The magistrate first fined him fifty dollars but later reduced it when he found that it was the man's first offence.

A young man charged with the theft of three bags of coal from a freight car, pleaded guilty to the charge and the magistrate gave him another chance as he allowed the man to go on a suspended sentence. The man was ordered to sign a bond to keep the peace for six months. The young man told the magistrate that his wife had been sick at the time and that he had to steal the coal to make a fire to keep the house warm. He said that he was out of work and had no money. The magistrate decided to give him another chance but warned the young man not to turn to stealing but to try and find a job.

A woman paid ten dollars and costs on a charge of being in possession of a quantity of beer while being an interdicted person and three men paid fines of ten dollars and costs on charges of illegal possession of beer and wine. Four ordinary drunks paid the usual ten and costs.

NOTE ON CONSCRIPTION
It is to be hoped that the following confused bit of conversation is not an example of the thinking being done on the subject of conscription in Canada at the present time. This conversation welled forth a few days ago from a lady who complained that her brother was wounded in the last war.

"It was conscription that caused it," she said. "My brother was wounded in November of 1917. You see, he went up into the woods to avoid conscription and a hunter mistook him for a deer."
