At the close of the second period a tie was still in being, only reading 2-2. key, Brklacich, Morris, Hepworth, to the old rough house style with Allan, O'Brien, Linton, Chartier and everybody receiving a share of the Patton bumps and with said everyone, holding to a slightly frayed temper.

Sports-So What!! By JACK WILSON

Rugby, baseball, horse racing and flishing have presented oddities to the sporting world with rugby doing about the best in this regard.

A reverse punt shattered ULC'As Hose bowl hopes and brought American sport scribes to an agreement that the act nosed out the no less "wrong-way proceedings" in the world series.

Jack Lerond placed boot to pig skin on behalf of the California squad Only to have said pig skin slither off the side of his boot and go in reverse. The situation was remedied when Ed. Welch, Lerond's bosom chum swung back, scooped up the misbehavin' oval on the 15-yard line, carried same down to ULCA's 40-yard line and as he was about to receive aggresive attention, lateralled to Lerond who galloped the remaining distance to the "object of affections" for the sole and winning tally.

'Ine world seres were voted, by one writer, as the top oddity of them all. Not quite so profound were many others who backed him up by voting on single instances.

Chuck Hosteler's fall between third and the home sack that helped Riger's lose the sixth game and the freak hop of that ball that bounded over Hank Greenberg's head to break up the sixth game received many a vote, with some of the votes going for the unorthadox actions of the apple and some for the official scorers who reversed opinions hours after the game by stating the play was a hit and not an error. Another ranking oddity was Larry MacPhail's sale of Hank Borowy.

(says here) Then there was the dog that wandered on the field during the Indiana-Illinois football game and cost the Hoosiers a touchdown.

Seems the referee blew his toy just as Indiana began a scoring play. Irregardless of the pooch, Indiana won 6-0.

A triple dead heat at Caliente and a four-horse race at Jamaica wound up with the leading pair of animals in a dead heat for first and the remaining pair of thoroughbred athletes running even for third. (However that is worked.)

Then there is one about an ardent angler going after pickerel, baitcasting in a weedy region, striking, getting a terrible tug, no pickerel but instead a wizened fox that had a duck in betwixt his choppers. Don't howl at me Wilbur, it was in the printed word.

There were plenty of thrills and chills thrown out at the tangle at the McIntyre arena last evening and we are still wondering as to how it was everyone got off without having some one colour up a glim or two. Boyce worked hard all evening . . . played a good game. Porter did some Houdini's for the crowd on many a shot in the starter Hughie Allan made cause for a little worry on the part of the Macmen Turcotte starred Hawkey, Morris and Wilson doing quite a bit of work, along with tenacious Jackie Ladds.

> Didn't fight but bordered near it, Played good game and never queered it. All game long fans were jumping Everybdy in the bumping, Checking, rushing, clearing, thumping Poem still ryhming, ain't that something, Penalties there were but four, Shoulda been a couple more, No-one injured, t'was amazing, Better quit, the boss is gazing, One last line before we squelsh her. We're as good a poet as McWelsher.

"BINGO PLAYERS LAMENT"

The bingo player's looking glum, His happiness is shattered, His hopes and aims For all his games Have been severely battered The only pleasure he has had, Was found with card and bean, From day to day He plotted play Till the game became his queen But now he learns with sorrow great, That soon to come his way. Is a bingo ban For the bingo fan And all the poor fellow can say Is, I found my sport And I loved the art. And perhaps I'd still be gay, If I'd never known, Of the bean and card And been born in a stodgier day.

(Wilbur McWelsher)

Saturday night was well spent if you attended the juvenile tilts at the McIntyre arena. Both tangles, even though the one involving the Air Cadets and Lions ended up in a white-wash score of 16 - 2, were well played, with all the fight and spirit common to juvenile hockey being expended by the four machines on the bill.

We do think, though, that if a greater number of fans attended the tangles the youngsters would put even greater effort into their game if that were possible.

In the ranks of the juvenile squads are a number of potential stars for the senior leagues along with plenty of material for the larger leagues to mould in to the required form.

Now we'll get back to the games and pick a trio of stars. First off we'd like to mention Fevero, who turned in a great game for the Movers... The two tallies he chalked up were well earned, well played for and well deserved

As for the other two on the list, we'll take Marson and Donovan, who, although sitting on the side of the team losing in a swamping affair, played their hearts out all through the tangle.

Both the gentlemen are of the midget edition but the game they played was of a greater proportion if that is the correct way to measure the subject in question.

New year's Eve, and as we approached Elda McShnorchel's boarding house, wherein friend Wilbur resides, the night air was suddenly split, nay shattered, by a raucuous voice crasning through melodious bars of Auld Lang Syne.

We knew at once that it was Wilbur's way of bringing in the New Year, even though he did sound rather draggy in spots. Nevertheless, we entered the residence and found Wilbur, still singing, mind, with his shaggy head buried deep in the pages of the famly snapshot album and garbed in his favourite crimson and yellow smoking jacket.

As we paused to survey the scene, Wilbur ceased his vocalizing took another bracer from the brine barrel, hovered on the scales of uncertainty for a moment and then swung into the lovely old ballad of "I can't give you anything but lo-o-ve Baby" with an air of the deepest sincerety, and all the actions and gyrations necessary to add punch to the song. Wilbur made it to the part about diamond rings and stuff, then on spotting us, standing by the purple and yellow polka dot curtains at the entrance of his den, he gave the song an ending by striking a sour note and sitting down upon the coffee table, much to said table's chagrin.

After clearing away the debris and the landlady, friend Wilbur became sericus and in time our sophisticated conversation came around to the much discussed topic of New Year's resolutions. Wilbur had two in all.

First: That he would never again allow himself to venture from the dry shore of the brine barrel. Secondly: That he would never again keep the alley cats, milkmen, neighbours and children of same, away from their much deserved rest through the privilege of listening to his belltoned, tenor voice.

As the clock in the steeple struck four, we made our way home after clearing away the song sheets, the empty brine barrel and a very happy. laringitis-suffering, Wilbur.
