

Notes To You

At the back of our desk drawer we keep a small but growing hoard of pennies. Every time life seems in danger of getting a little too dull and drab, we heave another penny in the drawer and sit back and hope that another newspaper movie will soon come to town.

We live for the day when the next one appears, and then, right at the head of the line, you'll see us -- eyes agleam, a faint flush on our flaccid cheeks, our nostrils a-twitch, and with our hoard of pennies, carefully wrapped in waxed paper, clutched tightly in our hand.

On account of we love the way reporters behave in the films. Pistols in both hands, an alluring blonde hanging on to his coat-tails, the reporter in the movies has a peachy time. That is the kind of reporter we want to grow up to be.

If we ever grow up. Life around The Advance isn't quite that thrilling, we find. Like the other week, for instance. We thought we had quite a story in prospect. Workmen were hacking away at the postoffice steps. We hung around for hours, waiting for them to uncover the treasure. No dice. Then we conceived the idea, as they commenced to mix cement to relay the entrance floor, that they were going to bury somebody there. Now, there would be a story. We figured we'd have the local daily sweating bullets, if only we could get a glimpse at the corpse before they had it completely covered up. But it just wasn't to be.

Rather reluctantly, we came to the conclusion that the only reason for all that fuss in the post office doorway was to enable the Dominion government to list Timmins under its public works program for 1946.

We had no better luck this week, when we hung around Pine St. North by the stockbroker's offices, to count the suicides. The market was definitely down on Monday, as you may have noticed, and showed every indication of going still downer.

But while the customers coming out of the brokers' offices were perspiring freely and while the groans were such as to force Bill Stanley to put extra beef into the fire alarm to make it heard, there were no pistol shots. No one, it seemed, had thought to bring any bullets.

Ambling disgustedly back to the office, we noted disconsolately that if there had been any blondes hanging on to our coat-tails when we started out in the morning, they had managed to find something more interesting to do in the course of the day. Nonetheless, we staggered into the office and flung another penny into our desk drawer.

Crept into the Gift and Book Nook to soothe the eyes following a prolonged examination of the stock quotations on Monday, and were glad of it. Miss Dodge had just got in a shipment of pictures. Some rather lovely stuff -- among them a sea-scape which should cool off the hottest living room. Few painters master the technique necessary to present a believable picture of the sea, and this particular painting is well worth a look.

We came out wiping the brine from our eyes.
