I know--how warm a barn can be,
How soft a bed the Christ-child had,
For once when I was small I went to see,
A cousin of mine, a farmer lad.

I know--how sweet the smell of new-mown hay,
How close and gentle great beasts can be,
For I patted a cow once long ago,
And heard her croon a melody.

I know--the peace of purple nights,
How close the skies above the meadows are,
For once I walked clover-scented meads
And saw a star.

I know--how mother's love the cuddly touch,
Of dimpled hands and bodies soft and warm,
For I cradled children three against my heart,
Safe from the storm.

I know--all this and more because I am a part
Of life's great way--this street and church and store
A Christmas tree, the chime of jingling bells
And a holly wreath upon the door.

Gay laughter rang merrily out upon the air and the glistening white slopes of the ski trails as ski enthusiasts gathered at their favorite rendezvous on Sunday afternoon. Many new faces, and ski wear at its most fashionable were noted. Seen among the "old faithfuls" skimming o'er the byways were Lee Murray, Leana Prince, Marie Rochefort, Dave Wemys and Jules Baderski.

Colours with a background of mystery and intrigue that cast their spell on the seasons lavish fashions and beautiful evening gowns worn by the ladies at the formal party given by district engineers added a distinctive note to the gay affair. Especially noted was the stunning gown worn by Gerry Turcotte, it was fashioned of cactus pink crepe with full sleeves slit to the elbow from a tight cuff and a full draped skirt. There was a distinctive gold buckle on the belt and with this Gerry wore lovely gold earrings to match.

Marge Nelson was lovely in blue gray crepe with flowered brilliants on the left shoulder and gracing the slim panel of the skirt. With this Marge wore snakeskin sling pumps with platform sole. Mrs. Mac Glendenning was charming in black crepe studded with brilliants. Mrs. Les Redford externally smart in black crepe with long fitted torso and a skirt of accordin pleats. Long fuschia gloves and matching evening bag completed the ensemble. Mrs. Tommy Godin vivacious in a two piece dress of gay red crepe. Mrs. Hogg attractive in fuschia crepe with fashionable s'de drape and Mrs. Mervin Webb chic in black draped jersey with hood.

Her attendant was her sister "Joe" who wore a smart dress of cactus pink crepe, with a hat of pink and blue feathers and a corsage of red roses. Nesbitt Woods attended the groom.

Following the quiet ceremony a reception for the immediate family was held at the home of the bride's parents. From a table festive in bridal tradition and centred with a three tiered wedding cake decorated with miniature roses, refreshments were served. The young couple are residing in town.
