SEA SONG

These are the things for which my heart is crying,
When one by one the rose of day has shed its petals white.
An old gray ship and white gulls flying,
Through blue bowls of dusk, like arrowed songs in flight.

Ah, down to the sea my heart would be going,
To follow where adventure leads as dawn swings down the sky.
Just to listen to the green waves song the restless plovers homing,
Where the white-capped breakers carol to the trade winds drifting by.

And oh, for the trade wind and the white spume flying,
And the lift of the gale on the green face of the sea.
The memories of its wild song and its bantering, taunting laughter,
I'll carry in my crying heart in the silent years to be.
