

The Indigenous Nations were forced out of the area as early as 1806 without proper compensation for their land. At the same time, new settlers secured tracts of land from the Crown on condition of clearing the woods to make the heavily forested area passable.