

The visitors were then transported across the river by a Volga Boatman in an old Volga boat (any resemblance to the boats used on the Volga River is purely coincidental). Upon reaching the far shore, the Sterling Engineer was greeted by the news that rock had been sighted. That information didn't fizz on the LongLac boys for they had been sighting rock for months. The true significance of the find was revealed after Jack had explained that the Hydro, for weeks, had been slucing the overburden from the bank into the river in search of bed-rock. The dam foundation will be built upon this solid bed-rock.

This Hydro project is forging ahead at a good pace. Next weekend, the boys are looking forward to a trip down to the proposed power house location on Terrace Bay.

Our many thanks to Jack Sterling and our apologies to the host for any miss-quoted statements.
