

TWO MOOSE BAGGED

As we went to press last Wednesday (Oct. 15th) we commented upon the "Terrace Bay nimrods who were on hand at the crack of dawn to greet the opening of the 1947 Moose Season."

Before the day was over two denizens of the forest, bearing a moose tag, had met their fate. Credit for one beauty belongs to Carl Mageran but the story surrounding the bagging of the second animal takes a little more telling.

According to reports, Bill Pryde, Ray Fleweling and Les Cox were hunting together when Mr. Moose was sighted. All three in the party fired shots and then went looking for their prey who had taken to the bush after being wounded. Bill Pryde got the shock of his life when the moose in question suddenly rose up from a thicket only a few feet in front of him. Needless to say Bill's trusty rifle was hurriedly brought into action with the desired result.

ANOTHER CHAPTER IS WRITTEN

Of interest to everyone in these parts, of special significance to Long Lac's Woodlands Department and Malcolm Spidell in particular, is the history which is being made to-day. In years to come it will be noted that on October 22nd 1947, logs from the Long Lake and Aguasabon River drive went over the famous Aguasabon Falls for the last time.

The stage of the river drive which will be eliminated to-day is a fascinating one. For in travelling less than two miles from the C P.R. railroad bridge to the mouth of the river and Lake Superior (a drop of more than 200 feet) the logs passed over rapids, dropped over the Aguasabon Falls and made a right angle turn to the left in a cauldron of white foam at the base of the falls, to be squeezed through a gorge only 12 feet or so in width and then over additional rapids to the river mouth—all under the watchful eyes of expert polemen and river drivers, who sometimes had to be let down by stout ropes into the canyon to prevent log jams.

By next spring and summer, when the pulp logs come down the river, they will be diverted above the Hydro Damsite to the wood yard, located north of the Millsite, there to be stored until Long Lac's 300-ton sulphate pulp mill goes into production, which is expected to be in January, 1949.
