FOREST FIRE DEVASTATION IN CANADA LAST YEAR 613,000 ACRES

The rotogravure section of the current issue of the Montreal Standard graphically depicts the recent forest fires in Ontario's Northland and labels the fire east of Chapleau in the Blind River area as "the worst blaze in the Northland's history". A caption over one of the pictures states "All this was started by one man's carelessness; a frightful monument of waste and destruction". "Residents of small communities threatened by the rolling banks of flames, stood ready with household goods packed, to flee for safety".

And all this occurred in our Northland a few hundred miles east of Terrace Bay. According to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics 5,017 forest fires demolished 613,000 acres in Canada last year, and at the present rate, the loss will be even greater this year.

Since so many forest fires are caused by carelessness, we would once again urge everyone to take every precaution to prevent fires in our forests. IT COULD HAPPEN HERE!
