Here's Something To Think About -

The hum of a thriving business came to an abrupt halt after G.W. Baron who walked into a safety shoe store in Panama City, Florida, took a seat, pulled up his trouser legs and asked to have a pair of shoes fitted to his artificial limbs.

Things like this do not happen every day, and clerks, and management, not to mention customers, may be pardoned if they took time out to listen.

And there is a lesson to be learned. It is fairly simple: Artificial feet, such as Mr. Baron wore, cost $300.00 a pair. There would be no physical pain if a heavy piece of steel should crush one, but there would be much financial anguish. Hence, he protects his artificial feet with safety shoes.

Mr. Baron lost his feet when he was a boy. In spite of his handicap he has become a painter, motion picture operator, and truck driver.

Nor is he very hard to please. If the shoe pinches he takes a pen-knife and whittles a little away from the toe, or he may add a little here and there to make it a snug fit. But he can't whittle away too much because the mechanism must be protected.

The lesson to be learned is this: If it is worthwhile to protect a pair of artificial feet, how could any intelligent man fail to protect real ones?

A tavern keeper was awakened in the early hours of the morning by some heavy pounding at his front door. Putting his head out the front window, he shouted:
"Go away, You can't have anything to drink at this hour."
"Who wants anything to drink?" was the response. "I left here at closing time without my crutches."
