LOST TIME ACCIDENT

On July 21, 1951, we had a lost time accident in the Woodroom. While an employee was turning a large log on the splitter ways, the wedge shaped axehead on the splitter, which is driven by steam, moved forward in some undetermined manner, pinning the employee's right forearm between the end of the log and the axehead. He suffered severe contusions to his right forearm. Fortunately his accident was not more serious, and with any luck he should be back to work in approximately 10 days.

Let us not be discouraged by this unfortunate incident, but make a great effort to attain a new and better record.
