From the column Smedley's Corner. Any similiarity between hotels living or dead is strictly coincidental.

A few days ago we came across the famous list of regulations for guest which a character by the name of Kamoose prepared for his hotel at Fort MacLeod in 1882. Kamoose made no pretense at being a man of letters but his 25 admonitions to guests seem to have stood the test of time in the literature of the early Canadian west. Here are some of the rules:

"Spiked boots and spurs must be removed before retiring.

Quarrelsome or boisterous persons, also those who shoot off without provocation guns or other explosive weapons on the premises.

And also boarders who get killed will not be allowed to remain in the house...

"To attract the attention of waiters or bell boys, shoot a hole through the door panel.

Two shots for ice water, three for a deck of cards, and so on

All guests are to rise at 6 a.m. This is imperative as the sheets are needed for table cloths.....

The hotel, you'll gather, wasn't fancy. If a guest complained about the condition of a towel, Kamoose would reply: "That's funny. Twenty other fellows used it and you're the first to complain."
