CONSERVATION CORNER

(News Release by Dept. of Lands and Forests)
Waterfowl

One of the world's greatest concentrations of wild waterfowl is in progress just north of the twin settlements of Moosonee and Moose Factory. Hunters from all parts of Canada and the United States are now on James Bay. The season opened September 15th and remains open until December 15th although most of the hunting will end this month. After that, weather conditions on James Bay are such that only the hardest trappers among the native residents venture over the big waters.

While there are thousands, perhaps millions of ducks along the muddy shores of the Bay, most of the hunting at present is for geese. The blue goose weighing about six pounds, literally darkens the sky at the south end of James Bay. There are also some snow geese which, some experts claim, are a colour phase of the blue. Farther north, on the west coast, the snow or "wavey" is in the majority.

No one, so far as is known, ever has tried to count the number of ducks or geese on Ontario's inland sea. Officials of the Ontario Department of Lands and Forests, flying from a point near Hudson Bay down the west coast of James Bay, reported some time ago that never, during their flight of several hours, were birds out of sight. Any reasonably good marksman can take his limit, if he wants it, during the shooting
