Miss Buncle's Book - D. E. Stevenson

Miss Buncle, a maiden lady, living in a tiny English village, loses her money.
Casting about in her mind for ways and means of renewing her fortunes she decides to write a book about her friends and neighbours in the village using the pen name of John Smith. To her amazement the book becomes a best seller. Her fortune is made but the village of Silverstream is in a furor. The villagers decide to horse-whip "John Smith" as soon as he is tracked down. Altogether an amusing book.

Fortune is a Woman - Winston Graham

Oliver Branwell first met Sarah before the war when he chanced upon her trying to fix a flat tire on her car. Years later working as an insurance adjuster he met her again while investigating a small fire in her husband's home Lowis Manor. He became quite friendly with the Moretons but felt something was radically wrong in this household. While the occupants were away he broke into the Manor to find an ingeniously planned fire in the cellar and a corpse in the living room. Subsequent evidence plainly showed that fraud was involved implicating Sarah. The events that occur before the case is solved make this a suspenseful and interesting story.
