THESE LAKE TROUT ARE MARKED, MEN

Removing the adipose fin from 200,000 lake trout sounds like a man-sized job. Yet, four women working one-hour shifts--with a ten-minute break to revive circulation in their hands--accomplished this task between March 24th and April 10th at Dorion Hatchery, near Port Arthur, where the fish were hatched.

The fish were between 13 to 14 months old and four to six inches long. They averaged about 39 to the pound. They were clipped so that records might be obtained of their growth and the extent of their survival, following planting in Lake Superior.

Their adipose fin was removed because it is one that does not regenerate easily. Thus marked, the fish can be recognized by commercial fishermen, fishing club and other anglers who will report such catches to the Fish and Wildlife Division of the Department of Lands and Forests or the Fisheries Research Board. The clipping was done under the direction of John Budd and Hartley Holmberg, both on the staff of the Fisheries Research Division. The fish were anaesthetized by the use of M.S. 222 (Tricaine Methane Sulfonate), making them docile enough to be easily handled.

The clipped lake trout were planted at the west end of Lake Superior in the Pays Platt, Rossport and Terrace Bay areas. They were transported by tractor trailers from the Lakehead, 20,000 fish to the load, and two loads going every two hours between April 28th and May 5th. This was the second large-scale planting made from the Dorion Hatchery since 1958, when the lake trout rehabilitation programme was initiated on Lake Superior. It is expected that it will be another year or two before definite results of this planting will be determined. Meanwhile, Department officials, commercial fishermen, northern fishing clubs and other interested parties are waiting hopefully in anticipation that it will do a great deal toward restoring the lake trout population of Lake Superior.
