REPRINTED FROM THE SUDBURY SCENE
BY ERIC NICOL

Nineteen sixty-three is only a few weeks old, yet already I note there is a new bathroom tissue on the market called Ballet. The great Nijinsky must be excuting frenzied pirouettes in his grave. I am no balletomane, but it seems to me that lovers of the art have grounds for complaint about having it identified with the rather functional scroll abutting the biff.

Granted that one of the triumphs of the 20th century has been to make the bathroom a pretty salon of luxury, calling a bathroom tissue Ballet is still a bit of a strain on the aesthetics. Others may judge otherwise. If you are in the habit of twinkling in the bathroom sur les pointes, or possibly au pas de bouree, and performing a series of brilliant entrechats before getting down to business, the tissue will strike you as appropriately dubbed.

But if you enter the bathroom as I do, falling over the claper bucket, you may join me in wishing that paper manufacturers would return to earth in their nomenclature and call their tissue by some name aimed more at discouraging little fingers from using the stuff by the yard - Whoa! for example.

PULP AND PAPER INDUSTRY SETS NEW RECORDS

Output of Canada's pulp and paper industry once again reached a new high in 1962, states R.M.Fowler, president of the Canadian Pulp & Paper Association, in a year-end review. Production was some 3% above 1961, reflecting increased total shipments both in Canada and to export markets. It appears that 1963 will be another year of moderate growth, with the possibility of a total increase of about the same order as in 1962. Final 1962 figures are expected to show newsprint production marginally lower than in 1961. However, total shipments were slightly higher, with increases to the domestic market, the United States and Britain more than offsetting declines in some overseas areas, principally South America and the Far East. Output of paperboard reached an all-time high, up some 12% from 1961. Production of book and writing papers was also at a new peak, about 9% above 1961. Production of wrapping papers increased some 5% and output of specialty papers rose some 13%, both reaching new records.

$800 MILLION TAR SANDS PERMIT APPLICATIONS

This article is too lengthy to reproduce in its entirety. We list briefly a few highlights.

More than $800 million in capital investment is represented by applications made so far for permits to engage in commercial development of the fabulous Athabasca bituminous sands. One permit has been granted to Great Can.Oil Sands Ltd., with estimated capital cost of $125 million. The second and largest project occupied two days of hearings and is the plan of Cities Service Athabasca Inc., for a $360 million capital outlay. The third application was filed by Shell Oil Co.of Canada Ltd. in a surprise move the day before the Cities Service hearing opened (Jan.14) with a projected cost of $260 million.
