IN SIX YEARS (The Daily Times Journal)

Men in Northwestern Ontario who are diligently performing the groundwork which is to be the prelude for a full-fledged Lakehead University will be encouraged by the remarkable success which attended similar efforts in behalf of the University of Waterloo in Southern Ontario. The story of Waterloo has just been circulated throughout the world by Unesco as an example of what can be done in a short time.

Telling the story, J.D Adams says a modern concept in curriculum planning, which might well serve as a model for new universities in the developing nations of the world, has enabled the University of Waterloo, in Ontario to become the fastest-growing university in Canada within six years of its foundation.

Waterloo's programme of co-operative education is a combined operation between the university, industry and government agencies in which students divide their time between the university, for academic studies, and industry, for practical training.

The co-operative programme is offered in the Faculty of Engineering since, to date, this has been the most suitable area to integrate academic work and practical experience. Students spend alternating terms of four months on campus and four months in industry on a year-round basis throughout their course, with half the student body on campus while the other half is in industry.

Under this arrangement industry provides one job for each pair of students at the University. As one student comes off the job for his next term at the University, his counterpart on the campus takes his place on the job.

In this way the University can provide maximum use for its facilities and efficiently support a sizeable enrolment without sacrificing academic quality.

A highlight of the evening was the presentation of a Port Arthur Curling Club key to the Terrace Bay Club. The presentation was made by Ray Cousineau, President of the Port Arthur Club to Jim Clancy. He invited all members of the Terrace Bay Club to make use of the key. (Continued on Page 8)
