

VACATION PLANNING? REMEMBER YOUR CAMERA

Planning a vacation? Whether your trip will be a jaunt 15 miles away, or a trek to the Rockies, Laurentians, or the colorful Maritime coastline, you'll find endless picture-taking opportunities. Photography will add enjoyment to the trip itself.

Just as important, it will help rekindle memories and fun when you show your vacation pictures to friends and relatives.

Many of your vacation photos, naturally enough, will centre around your family and friends. But you'll also want to try your hand at landscape views.

Remember that good photographs, whether of landscapes or people, don't "just happen". They are planned with a bit of care. Select the best available viewpoint. At a lakefront, for example, you don't have to shoot a pier head-on. Instead, to give a feeling of depth, try framing the pier with buildings.

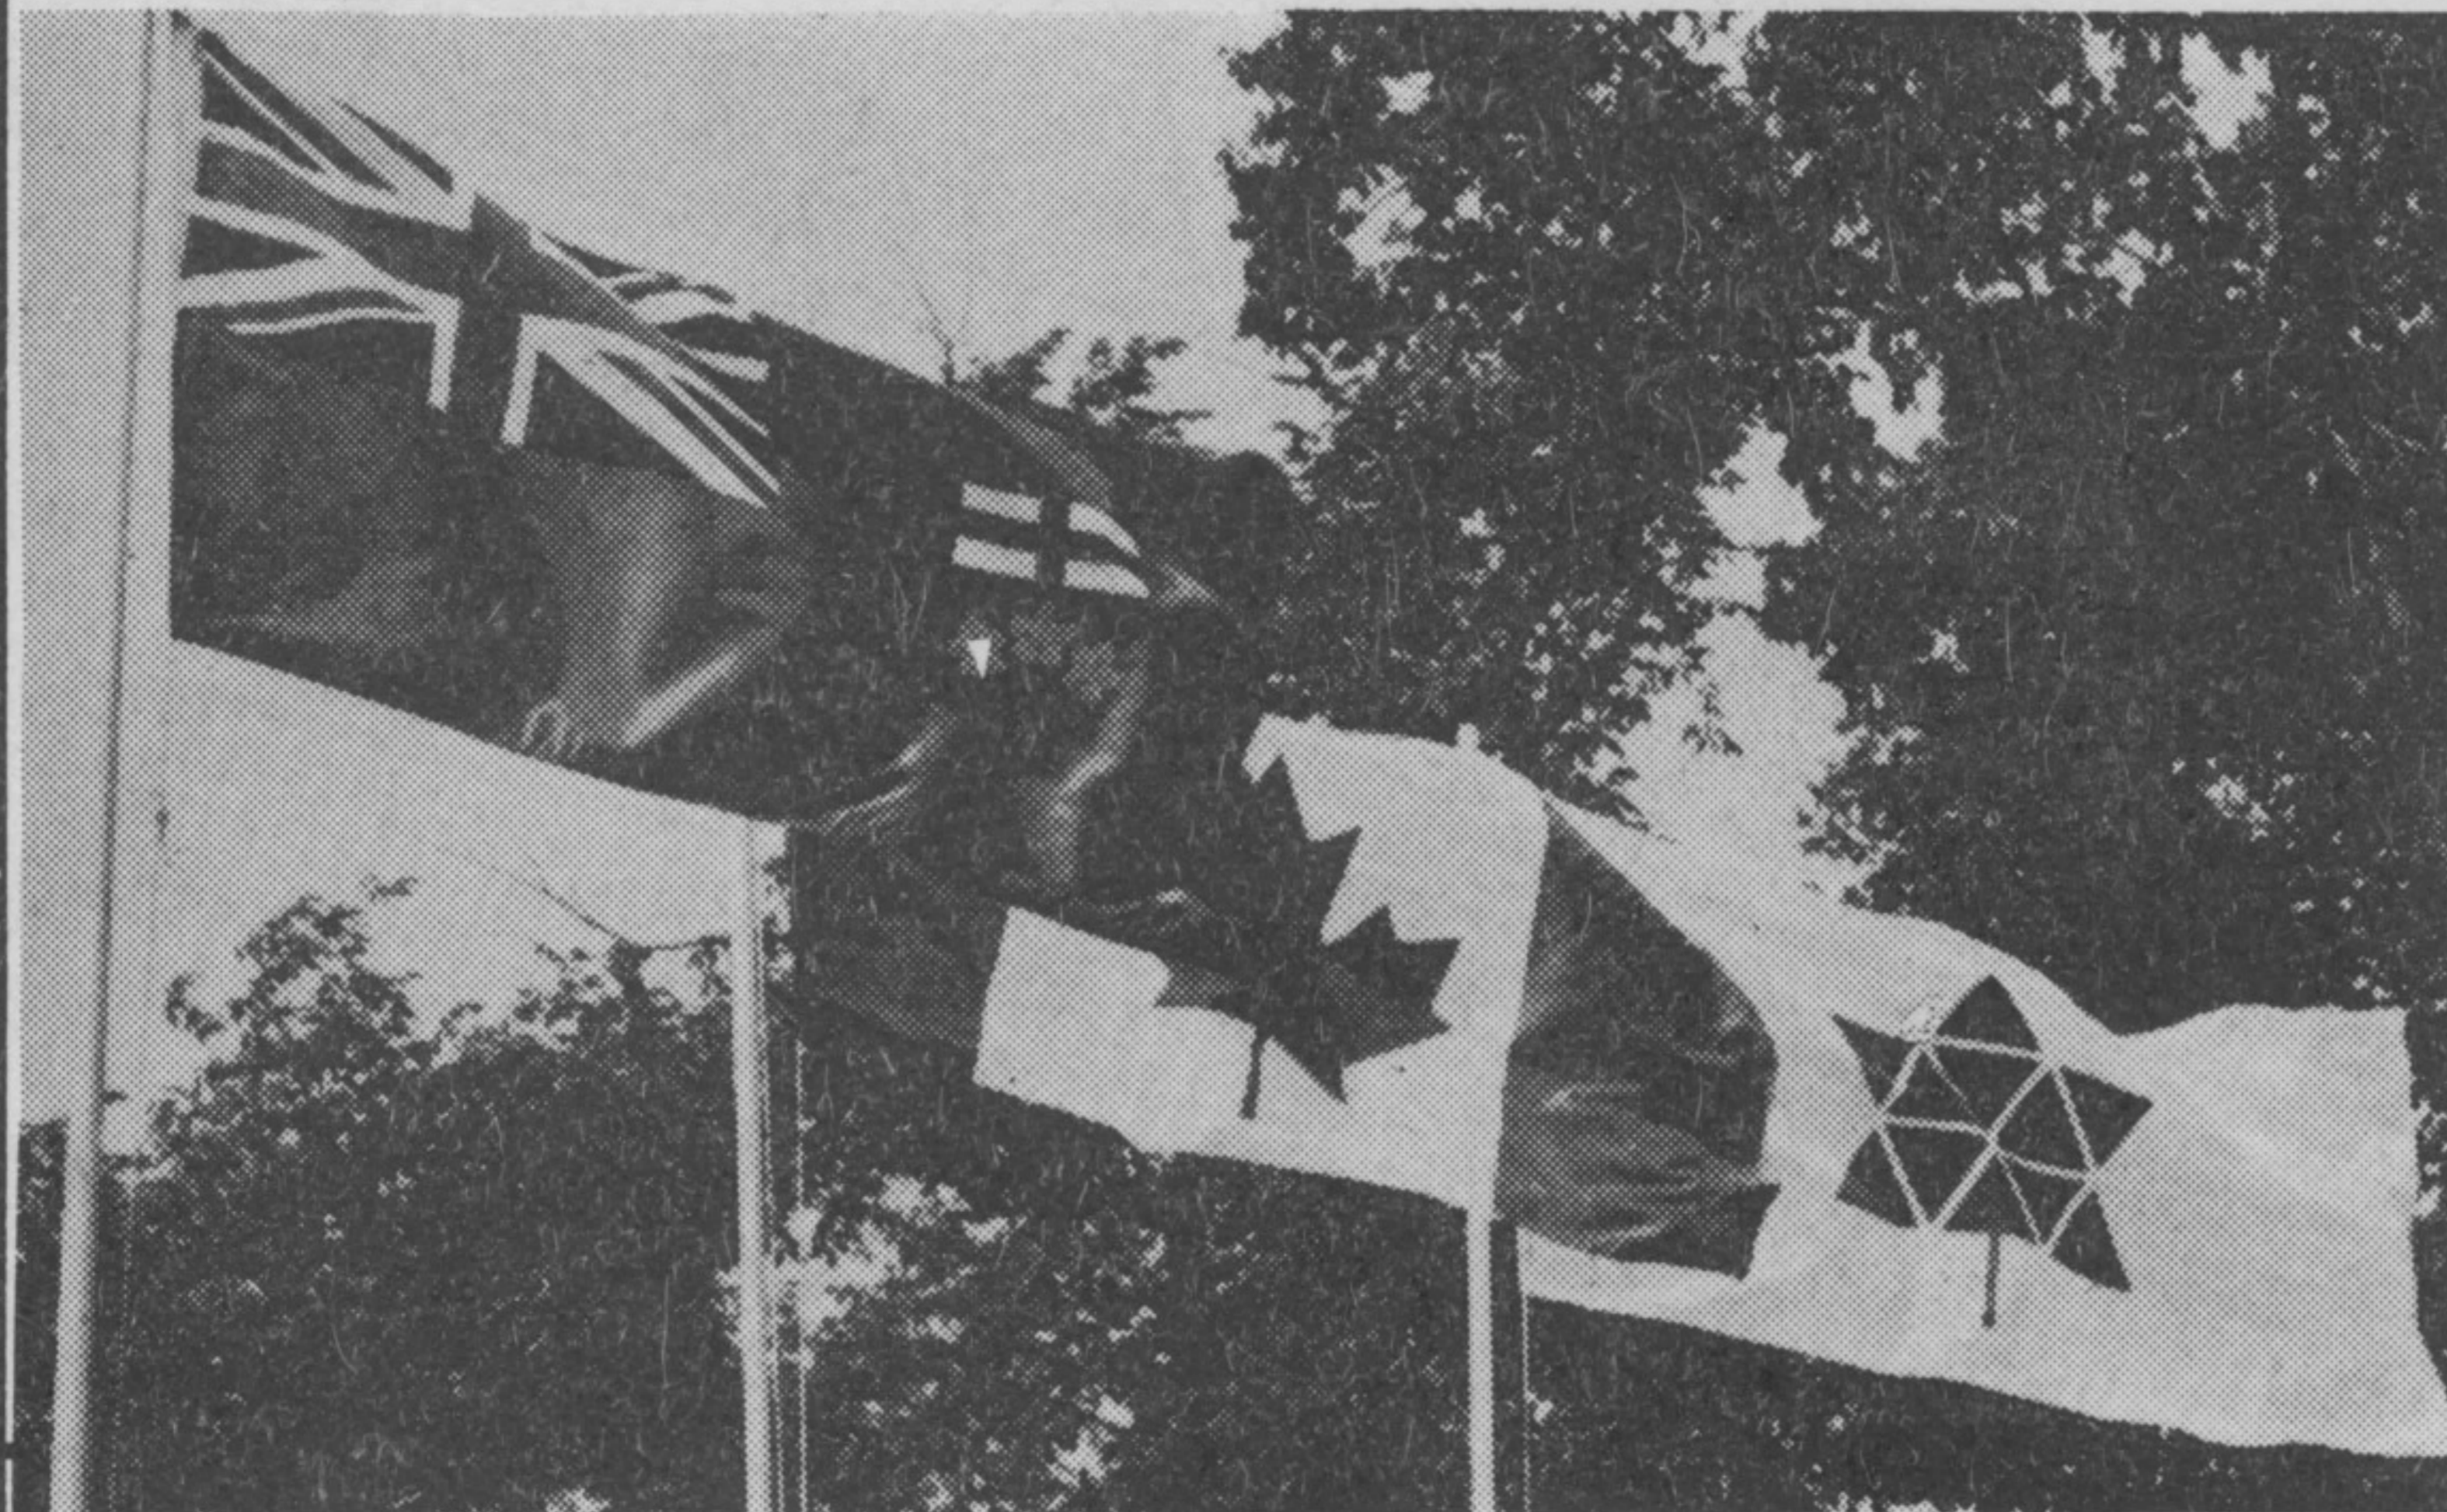

Your family and friends can be included in many scenic shots. But instead of having them stare self-consciously at the "birdie", capture them looking at a point on the horizon. That way, they can lead the viewer into the scene.

While travelling, remember to store your camera in a cool place; in a car, avoid the glove compartment or rear window ledge. And avoid taking snaps through a dirty window. If you snap from a moving car, roll down the window and hold the camera firmly, with your elbows pressed against your sides. Resting your arms on the car is a sure way of jarring the camera.

Before the trip begins, take a few precautions. Stock up on film. If you've just bought a camera, practise taking pictures well in advance of the trip so you'll have a thorough knowledge of its operation. If your camera has been tucked in a closet for some weeks, use a soft cloth or lens tissue to clear away the dust, especially from the lens.

Then, when you leave on your trip, make your camera a constant companion. Remember that good picture possibilities are everywhere.

As Ontario Centennial Planning progresses, these three flags will be a familiar sight. Flown in proper order are, left to right, the Ontario Provincial flag, the flag of Canada, and the Centennial of Confederation flag. A number of smaller communities are planning this flag arrangement at the entrance to towns and villages during 1967.

Guelph Painters Start Collection

The Guelph Painters Group has established a Centennial Collection of Paintings as its contribution to the community to mark the Centennial of Confederation.

Already they have six works by local artists and more will be added in the years to come.

It Takes Plenty Of Teamwork To Produce A NEWSPAPER!

Have you ever thought about "the team" that brings you the newspaper you and your family read for news, entertainment and information? It's the reporting staff that gathers the news — the editing staff that separates "wheat from chaff" — the make-up men and writers, proof-readers and skilled mechanics in composing rooms — the merchants and ad departments — the carrier boy and news vendor —
