For the second year in a row, Canadians in 1966 used more petroleum products per person than anyone else in the free world, according to statistics put out in the latest edition of "Facts and Figures About Oil in Canada".

National estimated oil product consumption for '66 averaged 775 gallons per person, compared with 750 gallons in 1965.

Second place United States used 756 gallons per person in '66.

Rapid growth continues in petrochemical phases of oil industry.
