THE BIBLE TODAY

 Week of August 7 to August 12, 1967

We often use the phrase "Millions of newly literate," but it makes all the difference when we think of the millions as individuals.

"I couldn't read until I was seventeen," said the African. "I hadn't even seen a book. Then, just as I had been initiated into the tribal rites that made me a man and a warrior, while my job was still watching my father's cattle, I saw a cook's boy with a book. I paid him to teach me to read.

"The first book I read was Matthew's Gospel, at the end of a month's teaching. I had to pay for my own schooling, and I was almost eighteen when I first went into a classroom. When I left school I was twenty-six."

The man who was speaking was the Rev. John Mbogori, the new Methodist Chairman of the Coast District in Kenya. Before his appointment he was for four years Assistant Secretary of the Christian Council of Kenya. He had been in Geneva, in Britain and in Moscow, learning and giving.

Those who read today are leaders of tomorrow. Many learn with their first book as one of the Gospels. This in turn has a profound influence on their subsequent years. The above story is only one of a million. It comes from the Methodist Missionary Society magazine.

LORRAINE BELLIVEAU HOME FROM HERITAGE CAMP

National Heritage Camp was held July 13 to 27 with 2,000 girls from all over the world participating.

July 15 campers and visitors attended the official opening ceremonies consisting of Presentation of Colours, recitation of The Heritage Prayer as a group, songs by the Camp Choir, retiring of International colours, flag drill, and a grand finale of the 2,000 girls singing "Something To Sing About".

Sunday services were held for all denominations along with an Ecumenical Service. Speaker at the service was Reverend Dr. Lloyd McLelland, Minister of St. John's Presbyterian Church, Cornwall. An "At Home" was held in the afternoon.

Life at camp consisted of cooking meals, swimming, canoeing, hiking, dancing, singing, and crafts.

Among the tours planned was a trip to Ottawa to see the changing of the guards, war museum, the mint, RCAF station and other attractions. Upper Canada Village was also visited on another day.

Wednesday an all camp campfire was held at the arena. Campfire songs were recorded and heard the next day on radio.
