OPENING LEAD: HEART

Today's South was playing standard American and didn't want partner to pass any opening bid, so attempted a forcing two-club bid. The result of his efforts was this slam, bid and made. It would not be recommended here to bid a forcing two clubs with the South hand as declarer has only nine sure tricks and needs eleven to make a five-club game. The North hand is full of points and the slam makes with distribution but North could just as easily come up with a "bust" hand. Forcing your partner to bid can be justified only when you have enough tricks in your own hand to make game or when you can easily sign-off at a low level. This hand could produce a poor North-South score if North's hand had been weaker in diamonds or void in clubs. However, South bids the club slam and was rewarded when both spades and trumps broke evenly. Heart queen was covered with dummy's king and East's ace, declarer winning with a small trump. Two rounds of spades and a spade ruff in dummy were followed by declarer cashing the good diamonds and drawing trumps with the top two honors. This line of play happens to work with the hand at even distribution but should East exchange a spade for a heart, declarer would be arguing with partner all the way home. In your game, if you require a forcing bid or a semi-forcing bid, find a system which is scientifically correct and which has been produced by a top-flight expert. There are many players who play a "short club" which has no system, no science, nor any sense, and which produces the occasional good score but more often causes new partnerships to form.
