Mrs. Jean Trott, of the Ontario Institute for Studies and Education, and a teacher all her life, spoke on the new concepts in school and children. Using her own childhood as an example. Mrs. Trott pointed out differences in the children of today. In dealing with them the rule which still gives the best return, is to be generous with praise and tolerant, when possible of faults. The keyword between all generations i.e. communication. If this bridge is kept, there may not always be understanding but mutual trust and affection will solve many situations which would otherwise result in an impasse. After Mrs. Trott's address she answered questions from the audience who were delighted with her matter of fact replies and wit.
