PARENTS RESPONSIBLE IN PROVINCIAL PARKS

A common occurrence at Ontario's provincial parks is that of children becoming lost or injured, often through neglect on the part of their parents. Perhaps it is the relaxing atmosphere at the parks which causes normally conscientious parents to adopt a more carefree and often, careless attitude.

While every effort is made to ensure that provincial parks are safe recreational areas there are still hazards. Some children, despite the admonishment of teachers and parents to stop and look both ways, still dart across roads. Fortunately, traffic speed in parks is much slower and serious accidents have been averted.

Sharp axes and knives, usually kept out of reach of exploring hands at home, are often left lying about at the parks inviting children to investigate and to experiment. Campfires seem to fascinate youngsters and painful burns result when some become venturesome or curious. Although park beaches are safe there is no guarantee that a child will not get into trouble. Vigilance by parents is essential when tiny tots are near the water. The use of floating devices is discouraged at the parks and parents should ensure their children have not taken inner tubes and plastic toys to the beach.

Every year children have become "lost" in the parks and although all incidents have ended happily with the child and parents reunited after a search, there has been considerable anxiety. Parents are responsible for their children in provincial parks and must give them personal care and attention.

BOATING - NEW TRAFFIC PROBLEM

Boating becomes more popular each year. The increasing number of boating accidents are an unfortunate byproduct of this popularity.

Boat owners should consider coverage for damage or injury to others that might result from their boating activities. Unless a boat is stolen, its owner can be held responsible if the craft is involved in an accident, according to the information bureau of the Ontario Insurance Agents' Association.

The best protection is liability insurance providing coverage for the boat and auxiliary property, and specially-designed insurance for the boater.
