THE BILL SMILEY COLUMN

IF HE SAYS SO IT MUST BE TRUE

By Bill Smiley

Take my advice. When your kid comes home from school and says breezily, "Hi, Dad. I have this project to do...", don't take the bait. Don't say a word beyond "Hrumph" as you flip your newspaper up for a shield, or better still, head for the bathroom and lock yourself in.

Never, ever, reply, "Well, what's it all about?" or "Is there anything I can do to help?" If you do, you'll discover, inevitably, that you have a project to do.

Projects are all the rage these days, in education. Give a kid a project and he'll learn everything there is to know about the Persian Golf, the origin of sand-paper, or the sex life of the blow-fly. He may never learn anything else in school, a strong possibility, but he'll always be an expert in one field.

For the rest of their lives, these kids will find some way, at cocktail parties or formal dinners, in casual conversation, to drag in the Gulf, the sand-paper or the blow-fly.

Which is good. Most people know practically nothing about practically anything. Thus, they can easily be put down by a forthright statement like, "But that's exactly what I've been saying. The whole thing is in direct contrast to the solemn, sedate, secretive sex life of the blow-fly."

They simply can't field that one, if it's properly delivered. And you can always change your adjectives to suit the situation. It could
