They hadn't been in very long and were not hot to the touch when she bit into one. But at that moment, an explosion ripped the egg apart, sending yolk all over the place, burning her eyelids, lips, tongue and cheek.

The microwave oven had heated the yolk to the point where it was rapidly expanding and the hard white of the egg was just strong enough to hold it intact until the girl bit into it.

Remember, canned food or anything that has a non-porous casing - even an egg - should not be warmed in such an oven.
