Cairngorms a barometer in the local granite.

Scottish ladies wore long dresses or skirts and a few pant suits, many wore their own tartan made into a floor length kilt.

Queen Elizabeth is a patron of the Royal Caledonia Curling Club, and the Canadian women wrote a letter to her and enclosed a C.L.C.A. Tour pin as a gift.

The president of the Ladies Branch of the Caledonia Club, Mrs. Margaret Matherwell, travelled with the group on the tour. When the tour was over she appeared at a reunion in London and showed the ladies movies she had taken at the beginning of the tour.

Included in the tour were visits to Lock Lomond, Robbie Burns cottage, the home of Sir Walter Scott (opened specially for the tour and the Canadians met his two great-great-great granddaughters who live there), Edinburgh Castle (it is only flood-lit at night during Christmas and for special occasions but they were turned on for the curlers).

There were funny incidents that happened - when the bus driver got lost driving from Aberdeen through the Cairngorm mountains and the group saw Balmoral Castle twice; someone looked out the back window of the bus and saw all their luggage rolling down the hill behind it; perhaps the funniest of all was when the jet airliner from Canada was approaching Pestwick. They knew some Scottish lady curlers would welcome them when they landed at 5 a.m. To mark the occasion the Canadian women dreamed up a humorous song to the welcoming committee. The words fitted the tune of "MacNamara's Band".

On landing, the Canadian party took up their positions on the plane steps. They were all wearing the team uniform - dark blue slacks and jacket and red sweater. They waved to the welcoming committee at the foot of the steps - four women in similar navy blue trousers, navy coats, blue sweaters and white scarves.

The twenty Canadians took a big breath and burst into song - "We're the girls from Canada you've heard so much about, We're the girls from Canada, without a blinking doubt, We've come to curl and have some fun and you will all agree,
