French Cuisine (by Dale Boutilier)

One Saturday, the Grade 13 French class got together with their teacher and her husband to prepare a French dinner. You can imagine the chaos that reigned in Mrs. Cougler's small kitchen that afternoon. There were about six main dishes being prepared all at one time, and the stock of pots and pans was quickly depleted.

It took a good 3 1/2 hours to cook everything, and the rumble of empty stomachs was heard loud and clear. Dinner was served at 7:30 and, after the shrimp, olives, wine and French onion soup, everyone dug into the main dishes. Plates were heaped with poulet basquaise (a chicken casserole), filet de sylvestre (sole), chateaux aux poivres (ground steak in cognac), and red cabbage, turnips and mushrooms. It was a struggle to get the last mouthful in, yet there was still dessert to go! Out came the rhubarb pie and chocolate eclairs, watered down with more french wine and liqueur.

There was enough food to satisfy Napoleon's army, but eight people managed most of it on that Saturday. Mind you, some left-overs were thrown out because the sight of them made everybody's stomach turn by the time they got up from the table. It was a struggle to get into the living room where they plopped down into the nearest chairs. Sighs of fullness and satisfaction were heard throughout the room, and there was a unanimous agreement that the dinner was a huge success. Crews were organized to do the dishes and by the time the last dish was dried, the evening was almost through. Plans are now being made for another dinner - This time with Italian dishes!
