POOR SHOWING AT MUSIC CONCERT

On Friday, February 23rd, seven musicians from Thunder Bay performed here for a poor audience of 100 people. Fortunately this didn't bother them - the show was lively and much enjoyed by all. John Dolce opened the show with some original music and some songs by Seals and Crofts with help from Damon Dowbac. Damon then did some solo work, the most notable numbers being Bruce Cockburn's "Going to the Country" and Cat Stevens' "Why Do the Children Play". He was then joined by Bill Oryniak and they did an old Beatle Blackbird. Damon brought in his mandolin for a couple of songs and then

Bill came on with his banjo and teamed up with Rod Brown for some foot stompin' country. Rod then did some solo work including his own arrangement of The Tennessee Waltz and Tupelo Honey by Van Mornson. For the last set of the show came Greg Reed on piano, Don Jewitt on guitar and Maureen McKeckran helping with the vocals. They amazed the audience with some Fraser and DeBolt, Elton John and their own version of Bruce Cockburn's "Goin' Down Slow".

Let's hope for a better turn out if they ever return to Terrace Bay again .
