WHAT CAUGHT MY EYE

- By Ray Shank

They certainly take their education seriously in Japan. Two Japanese students recently killed themselves, apparently disappointed with their examination results. A 15-year-old boy rigged up a makeshift electric chair and electrocuted himself, and a girl, 13, set fire to herself.

Latest big-selling item for the ladies is a bubble gum-scented body oil - sometimes called eau de Dubble Bubble. It sells for $1 per half ounce. It's just a cheap perfume, but one Detroit store that sells the stuff reports that it's the hottest selling item in its boutique. The store owner says that when the body oil was first put on display, the store smelled more like a candy factory. It comes in various flavours - Dubble Bubble, Bazooka, Fireballs, Sour Grapes, Sour Applies and Banana Gum.

An Australian and a Scotsman were sitting in a bar. The Scot queried the Aussie: "Do you have many Scotsmen in Australia?" "Not too many", the Australian replied. "our main problem is with rabbits."

The Toronto Sun's action line column accepts some very silly problems from subscribers. Like this one:

"I need your help. On my way home from work the other night I bought a copy of Playboy for my husband because he always reads it. Well, he bought himself a copy too so now we have two copies that we don't need. I want to return the one I bought but the store manager says they don't take returns on books or magazines. The magazine costs $1 and it really is a waste of money to buy two of them. Do you think you can help me?" First of all, if $1 means so much to the lady, why did she bother buying the magazine? Secondly, there must be greater problems in the city of Toronto than the one mentioned above. The Action Line column guffed in published it, I feel.

Here's a cute little story out of United Press International's wire services. Seems when Arthur Baker of London, England refused to wed his girlfriend, Laura Alderman, she called off the affair. A court was told that Baker then .. (1) shouted through Laura's letterbox; (2) heaped soil on her windowsill; (3) and hung a pair of his undershorts over her window. The court ordered Baker to keep the peace for two years. Said Miss Alderman: "I will never marry him now. I never want to see him again. He's a little twerp." Baker, by the way is 69 years old. Miss Alderman is 74.

In Lincoln, England, meanwhile, Jonathan Guinness, 42-year-old candidate for the March 1 by-election in Lincoln, said in a recent pre-election campaign speech that razor blades should be left in the cells of convicted murderers so they could commit suicide if they wanted to. Mr. Guinness, of course, is 100 per cent in favour of re-establishing the capital murder sentence. "Prisoners sentenced to die" said Guinness, "should be provided with a pill or something and then perhaps be gassed while they are unconscious".

Miami has some strange signs in front or near some of their churches. Like this one: "Attend Church Today .. Avoid the Easter Rush." Another reads "The Way You Have Been Playing Golf on Sundays, Wouldn't You Be Better Off In Church??"
