pets in the U.S., it has to be a big business

The Changing Times Dept.: A 1962 newspaper ran a photo of a U.S. actress picked as Miss Army Recruiting Girl. It was a photo of Jane Fonda

Remember the Crisco Kid? All right, if you do, can you remember the name of Cisco's partner? And also the name of Crisco's horse? The sidekick was called Pancho ... the horse, Diablo. Duncan Renaldo, who starred as Crisco Kid in the 50's, is now 68 years old and his horse, Diablo, is still alive at the age of 33

Those rumors a few years ago that the Leaning Tower of Pisa was slanting more and more every year and was in danger of someday falling, was only partly true. Experts say that the Tower didn't budge during 1972. The 800-year-old Tower even withstood an earth tremor last year without falling. It is currently 14 feet off centre with the slant increasing by less than 1/25 of an inch annually

They've developed a train in England that travels at over 100 miles an hour and never actually touches the tracks. It's called a Hovertrain and it was built at a cost of $13 million in U.K. government funds. The special tracks used for the train cost something like $2.5 million a mile, so it appears the Hovertrain's life will be shortlived .

In Philadelphia, the city's mounted policemen are getting tail-lights. Their horses will wear white luminous leg stockings and a rump sheet to make them more visible to motorists at night. The portable, battery-operating tail-lights for the officers will be mounted on their backs
