HIGH SCHOOL CREDIT SYSTEM

The new high school credit system which enables students to design their own timetable, has prompted vigorous discussion among teachers, parents and students throughout the province.

Gone is the rigid pass-or-perish Grade 13 final examination, and the time when if a student failed one subject or two the entire year had to be repeated.

Today graduating students are judged on their complete school experience. Each subject taken and passed earns a credit, just as in university. This system is the result of five years of discussion among educators and teachers who were anxious to provide a more dynamic and flexible approach to secondary education.

The Philosophy, the problems and the benefits of Ontario's new high school credit program are discussion with Education Minister Thomas Wells by broadcasters Carole Taylor and Bruce Phillips on the OECA Special "The Quiet Revolution in the High School".

Ken Cavanaugh hosts the program and gives viewers a brief and precise explanation of how the credit system works.

The special will be shown on CHFD for Schreiber residence during Educational week April 8-14th.
