would be the same as the first, I switched to an NFL game after watching (er, trying to watch) that first half. It wasn't until the next day, after I dropped into the officer, that I was informed the fog cleared for the second half in Edmonton and some of the plays were visible on the boob tube.

Oh, by the way, in case you got cheesed off like I did after that miserable first half of fog and you didn't bother getting the score the Eskimos won it 25-23 and earned the right to enter the Grey Cup final against Ottawa Rough Riders.

The Grey Cup was played last Sunday, I wrote this column last Tuesday and couldn't comment at that time on the Canadian classic. But I just hope they didn't have fog in Toronto for the finale.

That's all we need is another 1962!!!

Can't say that I'm too happy with the National Hockey League standings, these days. Although there's still a long way to go before the end of the season, the order of position in either division is a far cry from what I predicted they would be come the end of the season.

As of last Tuesday, Boston Bruins appeared to be walking away with the east division, leading second place Toronto by eight points. And the Canadiens, who I picked for top spot were in third place, nine behind the Bruins and just one ahead of fourth place Buffalo.
