Is there any parallel to Saint Jean Vianney "We've looked into it and the situations are very similar," Bowlier stated. "The soil - fine sand, silt and clay - is exactly the same And as in Saint Jean, you can hear water running beneath the surface. But as I said, the hole is 16 miles east of here, which is a safe distance."

According to editor H.G. Kauth of the Marathon Mercury, the town's big hole in the ground "may become one of nature's majestic sights We're thinking of it in terms of tourist promotion. Except that sightseers should not get too close because a number of slopes are on the verge of collapse." Things are going to get darn interesting in the future, Kauth predicted.

"The hole is kind of unique," concluded reader Laurie Morgan's letter. "Just the same I wish we didn't have it."
