Your Funnybone

He who laughs often, laughs best. He actually lives longer and stays healthier, according to scientists who have found that laughter has a profound effect on virtually every important organ of the human body. Laughter is good for the glands and nervous system, too. The lungs are ventilated, the glands of the neck and throat get exercise, the supra-renals are stimulated and pour a little pep into the system. The heart also get a needed rhythmic and salubrious bouncing.
