

An automatic timer on your engine heater makes an efficient waste beater.

And you can save up to $20 a year.

If you use an engine block heater, an automatic timer on the line can save you up to $20 a year.

Most car engine heaters are plugged in from early evening until early the next morning. All it really needs for an easy start is about 3 hours of heat. Even less for a small car.

With a timer for your engine heater, the heat will come on automatically while you sleep, at the time you pre-select. You can save ten hours of electricity or more. That's up to $20 off your winter's hydro bill. If you also have an in-car heater, you can save up to $50, year after year. Remember, rising rates mean higher bills...a timer will help you offset these increases.
