Day Break Program

This program is intended to reach the ladies of our community who need a "break" for 1½ to 2 hours per week. The program will introduce the ladies to active and passive activities, and will work in conjunction with the Mom & Me program. Mom & Me has a few vacancies for children and for parents who are willing to assist. We are considering offering a baby-sitting service for the participants of the "Day Break" program only. If you would like to take advantage of this opportunity, please call and indicate your interest. The length of the program will be 8 weeks and the cost is to be determined. If you have a particular hobby or skill you can offer to the group, please let us know. Call 3542 for more information.

1983 Recreation Memberships

Memberships are on sale at the recreation office. The price for family or single full membership still remains the same, $48.00 per year. We also have single activity memberships available. Call for further information.

firm's third generation of spacecraft. The satellite was carried into orbit by the Space Shuttle in its flight last fall. The satellite was carried in the Shuttle's cargo bay and launched into an orbit 35,887 kilometres above the earth's surface.

The satellite cost $30 million to build and was constructed by Hughes Aircraft in California with the co-operation of Spar Aerospace in Toronto. The actual flight on the Shuttle cost $10 million. The six metre high communications satellite has been described as looking like a chrome garbage can with its lid open. Anik is the first of three of the new generation of Canadian satellites going into space. Anik C2 is planned to be launched in April and Anik C1 is planned for 1984.

The new satellites are considerably stronger in signal than their predecessors. The stronger signals can be received by ordinary roof-top reception dishes if the individual buyer wants to pay several thousand dollars to purchase one.

According to Larken Keewin, the president of the National Research Council, Anik C3 is the most powerful domestic communications package ever placed in space. Anik is capable of handling 32 colour television broadcasts and more than 21,000 voice and data communications simultaneously.

"It is no accident that this is the most advanced non-military satellite of its type in, or above, the world. This is elegant technology. It is also a paying proposition. Yesterday's scientific enterprise is today's commercial enterprise."

"Canadians have demonstrated a forward-looking panache in converting orbital mechanics into soaring share prices. Ours in fact, was the first domestic communications satellite network that paid its own way."
