Treat stains promptly

Don't let the warm memories of Christmas dinner be spoiled by permanent food stains. Learn the proper methods of stain removal and you won't have a problem, say home economics specialists of the Ontario Ministry of Agriculture and Food.

During the festive season, furnishings and clothes are prime targets for cranberry sauce, wine, gravy, candle wax and alcoholic beverages. Here are some hints for the removal of these particular stains.

Cranberry sauce and wine can be grouped together as fruit stains.

Sponge or soak the stain immediately with cold water — don't let it dry. If the fabric is washable, soak in an activated enzyme product, then launder in the hottest water possible for that fabric. Bleach, if necessary.

Candle wax should be scraped off fabrics with a dull knife. Soak the stained area in cleaning fluid then wash as usual. If a wax color remains, sponge with equal parts of rubbing alcohol and water.

Pre-soak gravy stains in an activated enzyme product. Pre-treat with a grease solvent such as perchlorethylene which is readily available in drugstores, then launder.

Don't let alcoholic beverage stains dry before trying to remove them. Sponge or soak stained fabrics immediately in cold water. Wash in warm suds. If the stain remains, soak for a half hour in a solution of 30 millilitres (two tablespoons) hydrogen peroxide in 4.5 litres (one gallon) water.

Stains can ruin beautiful furnishings and fabrics. Immediate attention and proper treatment can prevent permanent staining and restore items for use on many Christmas days to come.

WILLING TO COMPETE
