

Marijuana information response phenomenal

by: JUDIE COOPER
Remember the "Stay Real" pamphlets about drug education that arrived with the March family allowance cheques? More than 300,000 parents responded by requesting copies of the "Stay Real" booklet and accompanying parents' information package called "Straight Facts about Drugs and Drug Abuse", according to "THE JOURNAL" publication of the Addiction Research Foundation, June edition.

This unusually high response - more than three times that expected - indicates that parents are confused about marijuana and other drugs and want up-to-date information to pass on to their teens. Laurie Jones, a communications officer for Health and Welfare Canada termed the response "phenomenal". She adds that the health promotion directorate has also filled 150,000 bulk-order requests from schools and health associations.

The "Stay Real" booklet provides twenty four pages of concrete, non-moralistic information on marijuana and hashish with parent-teen conversation starters included in a special section. "Straight Facts about Drugs and Drug Abuse" takes a general look at drug-related issues and provides charts with detailed information on seven categories of drugs.

Ms. Jones points out that neither booklet is likely to affect the chronic drug user, but it should help delay or prevent onset of drug use by younger teenagers who are indecisive about trying marijuana or other drugs. They also increase awareness and can contribute to rational communication about drugs.

Provision of these booklets is part of a three year, 2.1 million dollar drug education campaign begun by the government this spring. Future releases will include television commercials, two magazines scheduled for publication this fall and teen surveys on campaign awareness and attitudes to drugs.

Local information on this and other drug education programmes can be obtained from the Community Corrections office in Schreiber, 824-3036.
