Tot Lot News

The Tot Lot program this week included many games and creative crafts. The highlights of the week were a movie called, "A Visit to the Hospital" and one titled, "The Rise and Fall of the Great Lakes." We also toured the hospital with the 3 to 6 year old group. The following day, a visit to the beach provided a lot of fun and enjoyment for all. We hope to see all of you kids again next week and bring along some friends to join in the fun.

The Tot Lot staff would like to extend a special thanks to the hospital staff. We had a great time! We would also like to thank the Chief of Police for his assistance in helping us get the children across the highway safely.

Governments are distorting the system

by W. ROGER WORTH

When the politicians and government bureaucrats get as deeply involved in planning and running the system as they are now, distortions arise that have horrendous effects on the hard-working farmers, manufacturers and small-time entrepreneurs who really make the economy tick.

Two recent, unrelated incidents highlight how serious the situation has become.

• With more than 1.5 million people unemployed in the country, Canada's farm community reports that hundreds of acres of berries have been left to rot in the fields because pickers aren't available.

The reason? Potential workers fear they will lose unemployment insurance or social assistance support if they work for only a few days, which is common in the berry picking game as employees move from one farm to another.

So rather than sign up for farm work, the unemployed continue to draw benefits, while the berries rot. To add insult to injury, farmers were required to play the government's red-tape game: forced to fill out extensive government forms, even if the individual only worked for a few hours.

Effectively admitting its mistake, Ottawa belatedly backed off, relaxing some of the stiff new regulations. But by that time, the berries had rotted. There is always next year.

• Across the country, governments at all levels are spending money they don't have to provide so-called "job creation" grants to new or expanding businesses, all the while forgetting about the jobs that will be lost as subsidized firms have difficulty competing with those accepting the handouts.

In Hamilton, Ontario, for example, a Winnipeg company plans a 302-room hotel that will cost $15.6-million. The federal and Ontario governments are providing the company with $3.9-million as an outright gift, or a full 25 per cent of the cost of the project.

What's more, the City of Hamilton is spending $1.6-million to build a subbasement and parking lot, and another $900,000 for a street overpass.

The question: how will other unsubsidized hotels in the city compete with the newcomer that has received so many free taxpayer dollars? The simple answer: they'll have a rough time indeed.

If this type of government largesse was a single incident, it might not be worth mentioning. But similar deals are being concocted daily in all regions of the country as one business after another hops on the gravy train. The politicians take credit for the "new" jobs, but fail to accept the blame for layoffs at competing firms.

The sad fact is, governments are distorting the competitive, free enterprise system, creating a remarkable advantage for the companies that get grants.

As Patricia Johnston, senior vice-president of the 64,000 member Canadian Federation of Independent Business said in a recent speech:

"Every single meeting of small business people I have ever attended breaks out into hostility at the very mention of grants. Most of them have suffered from the subsidized competition of a rival. In an environment of 150,000 annual business start-ups, no granting authority can assure itself that it isn't funding one guy to put another out of business."
