Corn... In Terrace Bay?

by PAULINE ZIEGLER
This year's hot summer brought with it a feed of succulent corn on the cob for Peter and Daphne Monks. It's been said in recent years corn couldn't be grown in the north but with a bit of determination and tender loving care here we see it. The tiny plants were planted the end of June then wrapped with a double layer of heavy plastic attached to a four foot high frame. This acted as a mini open-topped greenhouse. The stocks flourished to six feet high producing at least six cobs, three of which were on display at the Fall Fair. For something that isn't supposed to grow in Terrace Bay, Monks both agree it sure tasted sweet and delicious.
