O.P.P. to celebrate 75 years

The Ontario Provincial Police are celebrating their 75th year of law enforcement in 1984.

The provincial police force was founded in 1909. From the original 45 men, it has expanded to its present-day complement of 5,200 police officers and civilian support staff.

The O.P.P. polices almost one million square kilometres in Ontario as it has a "residual" policing responsibility: that is, it polices all of those areas which do not have an established police force.

O.P.P. Commissioner Archie Ferguson said, "The O.P.P. has been an important element in the development of this province during the 20th century. The O.P.P. is present in almost 200 communities and many of the anniversary activities planned will involve people in the communities we police." Commissioner Ferguson said that one of the first signs of the 75th anniversary will be bright coloured decals displayed on O.P.P. cruisers. The decals will also be placed on doors leading into O.P.P. buildings.

An underlying theme of the anniversary will be the provincial police force's preparation for the years leading up to the hundredth anniversary in the year 2109.

Prominent in the 75th birthday celebrations will be the O.P.P. Pipes and Drums Band and the Golden Helmets Motorcycle Precision Team. They will be visiting fairs and parades all over the province.

Included in the anniversary plans is publication of a book on the history of the O.P.P. It is expected that this book will become a valued addition to many private and public collections.
