Great moments in Ontario

Put on your party hats and bang the gong. 1984 is going to be a year for Ontario to celebrate. The province's citizenry will be commemorating Ontario's Bicentennial with a host of parades and parties, fairs and festivals in a year-long tribute to 200 years of building.

Festivities will be as diverse as you could expect in a province as varied as Ontario. Look for a Queen Victoria look-a-like contest in Lakefield, hot air balloon races in Barrie, an apple pie bake-off in Aylmer and a 1,000-soldier re-enactment of a battle at Prescott.

On the grand scale festivities will include a re-enactment of the 1500-mile canoe trip from Lachine, Quebec to Old Fort William at Thunder Bay by students of Lakehead University who will retrace the route used by the fur traders 200 years ago. Two of Ontario's Great Lakes ports will celebrate seafaring history when spectacular tall ships from around the world dock in Toronto and Kingston.

The Bicentennial marks the arrival 200 years ago of the United Empire Loyalists who laid much of the social foundation for present day life in Ontario. These people left the United States after the American War of Independence to continue living under monarchist rule in the British colony to the north.

The Loyalists joined with the earlier French settlers and Native inhabitants to form Ontario's first major settlements. Celebrations, however, will go beyond the first settlers to recognize the significant contributions of all Ontarians who comprise our province. Ontarians can celebrate their diverse heritage with roots all over the globe.

Grass roots involvement is the key to the party and the Government of Ontario is encouraging communities to organize their own Bicentennial celebrations. Some 760 of Ontario's 799 municipalities have indicated their participation.

Ontarians have a lot to celebrate. In Brantford, Alexander Graham Bell developed his idea of the telephone; in Toronto, Frederick Banting discovered insulin; and in Kingsville, Jack Miner saved the Canada Goose from extinction. These are just a few highlights from Ontario history that will be celebrated in the Bicentennial.

This year Ontario will be visited by both Her Royal Highness, Queen Elizabeth II and His Holiness Pope John Paul II. During Her Majesty's July visit, the Queen will tour many areas of the province, while the September visit of the Pope to Toronto and the Martyrs' Shrine at Midland will put Ontario in the world spotlight.

"Celebrating Together" is the Bicentennial theme and this column will be bringing you up to date with reports on how communities across Ontario are joining together with an assortment of parties, from levees to strawberry social as well as descriptions of the people and places that have become part of Ontario's mosaic over the last 200 years.
