Paper Tole

(beginners and advanced): Bette Hasting in conjunction with Con Federation College)

Last fall we ran a successful workshop for beginners Paper Tole. On Saturday May 5th we are hoping to offer a combination beginner's and advanced workshop.

Paper Tole is an old art form dating back to the 18th/19th century Europe. It is a three dimensional picture created by cutting three or more identical prints and layering them together using silicone. The student will be cutting each print apart in a different manner and sculpturing and layering them to produce a dimensional effect. Beginner's will learn all basic principles and complete a project. Those who have taken the course previously will learn advanced and new techniques and will complete a different project. This is a 6 hour workshop and times are from 9 a.m. - 12 noon and from 1-4 p.m. Please call the recreation office if you are interested.

A breath of fresh air across the land

by W. ROGER WORTH

Somehow, many Canadians discount small business. They tend to think of the little companies and individuals that produce, buy, sell, import, export and market products as being small timers.

Nothing could be farther from the truth.

A few well chosen thoughts may help dispel such drivel:

The major department store chains have been laying off employees, downgrading service and cutting costs as they attempt to maintain profit levels or limit losses. The reason? Smaller firms with top-notch service have been openly competing with the conglomerates on price, quality and service.

The nation's big manufacturers have for years been paring staff and eliminating Canadian employment, particularly during the recession. Yet big companies such as Chrysler, Massey-Ferguson, Maislin Transport and a great many other conglomerates easily accepted government subsidies and support to offset huge losses. Indeed, many of the companies actually fought for the taxpayer dollars.

Meanwhile, smaller firms that were forced into bankruptcy or receivership got little support from governments.

Suddenly, though, over the last year or so the bureaucrats and politicians who had little time for small business have been forced to change their ways. The reason: a study by the 64,000-member Canadian Federation of Independent Business indicated that all the country's net new jobs were being created by smaller firms. The information was backed by respected economists and other business organizations.

The effect of the new information? Politicians asked bureaucrats whether it was true, and the mandarins were forced to concur. So, gradually, the politicians started to ask for policies that would let them spend money on the small business job creators, rather than bailing out their big business counterparts.

Among the sudden policy shifts:

In its latest budget, Newfoundland lowered the provincial corporate tax on smaller firms to 10 per cent from 12 per cent.

British Columbia has set up a task force to investigate the detrimental effects of payroll and other taxes on small companies.

Saskatchewan increased the corporate tax on large companies, while maintaining a lesser level of taxation for smaller firms. In addition, the provincial government announced plans to provide a variety of other programs that will help the province's small firms.

In Ontario, the government continues its corporate tax holiday for smaller firms.

In Nova Scotia, a sectorial study outlines the problems faced by smaller firms, and assistance will hopefully be forthcoming.

In Alberta, there are no major tax increases for the sector.

The federal government also seems to have gone out of its way to be more even-handed with the million or more firms that are involved.

What's more important than anything, perhaps, is the fact that more governments now seem to recognize that our smaller companies are not only important, but the key to a more prosperous, full-employment future.
