

Your Opinion

This week, we asked our readers about the rescue of the girls from the Slate Islands. The question was: Do you think that the rescue party handled the search properly and efficiently? Here are the responses:

Mike Stortini: It should have been started a lot sooner, but it was done in an orderly way.

Denis Gervais: Considering what the weather was like, they did a good job.

Bette Vanev: The men in the search did a fine job and they all should be commended, what with all the bugs out there and the weather they sure pull together and showed our town has what it takes.

Bob Boucher: Yes. I think so because there were lots of volunteers and they searched through the night even with the cold weather. All the people that took part in the search should be commended. They were very lucky to find them alive.
