Recall

Owners of "Motomaster Two Amp Maintainer" underhood battery chargers are warned to stop using them immediately. According to the manufacturer, Tenatronics Limited, and Canadian Standards Association (CSA), these chargers pose potential shock hazard, a recent CSA news release noted.

Investigation has revealed that because of reduced internal spacings, the charger's enclosure could become energized with full line potential of 120 volts if the charger is plugged into an electrical system that is not grounded. The problem was discovered during examination of the retailer's stock and no field incidents have been reported to date.

These battery chargers, sold exclusively by Canadian Tire Corporation stores since July 1985, carry the Model Number 11-1503-2 on the front of the units in the lower right hand corner. The serial numbers on the back of the affected units range from 50008 to 106516. Approximately 7,500 battery chargers are involved in this recall.

If you own one of these battery chargers, pack it securely and return it by parcel post to the manufacturer for modification. The address is: Tenatronics Limited, 776 Davis Drive East, Newmarket, Ontario, L3Y 4X1.

Once modified, the battery charger will be returned prepaid. The manufacturer will also refund the customer's postage at that time.

Modified units will be distinguished by a black check mark adjacent to the serial number and new units produced will have a four-digit number printed in green ink adjacent to the serial number.
