Canadian film on TV

(NC) — "Nothing ever happens," is the opening line of My American Cousin, but since the film's successful release, much has been happening to the spunky little Canadian film.

Since winning the international Film Critics' Award at the Toronto Festival of Festivals, then sweeping the 1985 Genie Awards with six major wins, My American Cousin has grossed in excess of $900,000 in Canadian theatres. The American box office receipts are also expected to be healthy. Those who missed the film on the big screen can see it on TV when CBC airs it on Sunday, October 5 at 8:00 p.m.

The sassy little movie, with a comic touch, is based on the memoirs of Vancouver writer/director/producer Sandy Wilson. Set in the golden summer of 1959, on a idyllic ranch in the Okanagan Valley, My American Cousin tells the poignant story of 12-year-old Sandy Wilcox who wishes she was 16 and someplace else.

As well as looking forward to its CBC Television premiere, Sandy Wilson and executive producer Peter O'Brian anticipate an international theatrical release of the film next year.

BEST ON THE BOX

(NC) — One look at the gripping film Salvador or at the CBC TV mini-series, Joshua Then and Now (Sun., Oct. 26 & Mon., Oct. 27), and it is evident why actor James Woods is held to be one of the most powerful actors of his generation.

In the explosive Salvador, Woods plays real-life combat photojournalist Richard Boyle, a hard-drinking self-destructive crazy who gets caught up in a brutal revolution.

In Joshua Then And Now, the TV adaptation of Mordecai Richler's acclaimed novel, Woods also plays a renegade, this time as Joshua Shapiro, a working-class Jewish kid who, after having escaped the ghetto to find fame as a journalist and TV pundit, suddenly, in middle age, finds his life in shambles. His best friend has died. He is publicly suspected of being a homosexual and is in trouble with the police. To top things off, his wife blames him for her brother's death and has taken refuge in a sanitarium.

The compelling Woods first came to international attention as Karl, the doomed artist, in the TV mini-series Holocaust, and as a chilling cop-killer in the film, The Onion Field. Woods' natural intelligence (he was a political science major at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology), quick wit and nervous energy have also served him well on such films as Once Upon A Time In America, Eyewitness, The Way We Were, The Choirboys and Video-
