speeds, it was decided that a steep hill would slow the bus to a point where action could then be taken.

Stake out

Constables Anderson and Rolland and Sergeant Hurteau of the Marathon detachment concealed themselves at Jackfish Hill and waited for the elusive bus to arrive.

The slowing bus eventually appeared and shots were fired at the tires and the engine in hopes of disabling the vehicle, said Burton.

There did appear to be engine damage, he said, but the bus continued on its way toward Marathon with three out of eight tires flat- three of the rear tires were now deflated.

Burton at this point suspected engine damage because he said as the bus continued on its way, it
