

Anne Todesco reviews buildings in Rosspport

By Anne Todesco

in the village.

Old buildings at Rosspport-
Here I go again...this time it is about old buildings still standing

They were mostly built in the early 1800s. Across the street is the old Perron house now owned by the Bruley family. Further along we come to a house now owned by Daniel Legault. It was built by his grandfather Onnasus (I'm not sure of the spelling) Legault.

He later sold it to George Gerow, then Wm. Schelling became the owner; within the last year Daniel became the owner.

The Rosspport Inn was built by a Mr. Spencer; succeeding owners were the Healys, John Anderson, the Nicols and the present owner is Ned Basher.

Romeo Bouchard's home was originally built by the Mogg family I believe.

This building was owned by several other Rosspportites before Bouchard purchased the building.

CORA ROPCHAN
RETIRES

It is with mixed emotions that I announce the retirement of my mom, Cora Ropchan. After 16 years of dedicated service to both myself and my customers and friends, mom has decided on a well earned rest.

Mom and John are moving to Thunder Bay; and although Friday, September 4 was her last day, mom may be back to help out in emergencies. Mom your family and friends thank you for your many years of service and we wish both you and John, a long, happy, healthy retirement.

Lorraine Seppala's cottage was built by a resident doctor by the name of Brown, later taken over by the Anderson family.

The Union Church was originally built by the Presbyterian missions, later known as the United Church when the Presbyterian and Methodist Churches amalgamated, and a few years ago it was named the Union Church, as all protestant clergy of different faiths serviced this mission.

Then there is the old Bain property now owned by Colleen Kenney; and the Eli Bruley property is now owned by Ronnie Legault.

Many of these old buildings are in the process of being renovated and modernized.

All the first stores in the village have been demolished or burned.

They were owned by the Bowmans, the Metcalfs and the Hcaleys.

Later the Deffassios and Gentel families built a small store where the Bill Hubelits now reside.
