Hewson noted that up until now, people have known her photographs to center on scenes only, but now she is getting into capturing ice scenes, flowers and close-up shots to name a few.

Hewson's style has now expanded to not only shoot landscapes and wedding shots, but also this more creative style of photography.

Hewson said she is doing more close-up shots now that also add a more modern quality.

These types of shots fit in with modern decor- "not just a plain old picture," she said.

Another facet of Hewson's work is what type of mat best suits the photograph.

"Mats are really important," said Hewson. "They help to express the feeling in the picture."

The mats can either help the shot look cold, for that effect, or look warm, if that's what's wanted.

"The colour of the mats bring out different feelings," Hewson said.

Hewson takes pictures all the time. One of the most important things she looks for when shooting is what the colour of the day is.

The different lighting of the day sets the mood of the picture and that is Hewson's key for taking photographs.

"It's all in the lighting. That's what motivates me."

Hewson made a point to mention that none of her work to this point includes the use of artificial light or filters.

Dec. 13th show
Hewson told the News that her show, on Dec. 13 will display pictures that are dramatic yet sensitive.

Photographs in her show will include her new, creative approach, as well as her past work such as scenery and landscapes.

Hewson took this opportunity to wish everyone a Merry Christmas. She hopes to see her friends and fellow citizens at her show.

Again, her Christmas show is at her home at White Sand Lake. Hewson and her husband Chris built what you will see there from what was once just a cabin in the woods.

The home is made out of natural woods and includes a heated whirlpool and circular stairs to the master bedroom.

There are plenty of reasons to see Hewson's Christmas show on Dec. 13.
